THE ANNUAL FALL LECTURE

The Abolitionists, Frederick Douglass and the Slave Narrative

Guy Peartree presents a dramatic narrative exploring Douglass' relationships with William Lloyd Garrison and John Brown, beginning with his first encounter with Garrison in 1841 and climaxed by John Brown's capture and execution in 1859.

Frederick Douglass, John Brown, and William Lloyd Garrison

The Abolitionist movement represents a quintessential moment in the historical landscape of America and Frederick Douglass', as a writer and orator who displayed enormous wisdom and insight, had a powerful effect on the thoughts and events of the era. Mr. Peartree brings Douglass to life with a dramatic reflection on two of Douglass' Lectures; "Self Made Men," and "The Negro, Ethnologically Considered."
